PREFACE.

THIRTEEN years after the publication of my List of Monumental Brasses in Norfolk Churches, I am able to add a companion volume on those which remain in the adjoining County of Suffolk. The list has been compiled, after an examination of rubbings made by me, when collecting material for the Church Heraldry of Suffolk, which is still only in manuscript. As many brasses have been brought to light in the County of Norfolk since 1900, I do not doubt but that those who visit Suffolk Churches in search of such, will be able to send me the description of some which, not having been found in my visitation, are not recorded in the list; though such may possibly be mentioned in one of the appendices.

I am indebted to my friend, Mr. Mill Stephenson, for many valuable additions to the Suffolk volume. He has kindly lent me the woodblocks, and helped me to compile the introduction, which will be a valuable help to those interested in the study of armour and costume. To him alone is due the chronological list; and having examined all the rubbings of Suffolk brasses in the British Museum and elsewhere, the valuable additional notes are all his. With his vast knowledge of the subject, the result of such indefatigable labour will be, I am sure, generally appreciated, and I hardly know how to tender to him the thanks which are his due.

With regard to the arrangement of the list, I must quote the words of my preface to the Norfolk volume:—"The churches are placed in alphabetical order; in each church the effigial and subject brasses being given before the inscriptions, each class according to date; then follows a description of what still remains of each brass, as also of what is known to be lost. The date in Clarendon type is that of the engraving of the brass, usually also the date of decease. Every genealogical reference in the list, unless enclosed within a rectangular bracket, or authoritatively specified, is recorded on the brass. The position in the church is stated, as also the size of the effigy or inscription in inches."

INTRODUCTION.

THE County of Suffolk does not contain so many examples of this class of memorial as the adjacent County of Norfolk, nor is it so rich in early and fine specimens of the brazier's skill. The small inscriptions and chalices, so characteristic, and which so frequently occur in the latter county, are almost entirely wanting here. There are, roughly speaking, 203 brasses with effigies, and about 230 inscriptions.

Military.—The military figures number forty-seven, the earliest is that of Sir Robert de Bures, 1302, at Acton, who is represented cross-legged in complete chain mail, with the exception of his knee-pieces, which are richly ornamented, and probably made of what is termed "cuir-bouilli," or boiled leather; over his armour he wears a long surcoat confined round the waist by a girdle, the mail hood and hawberk are not in one piece, as is shown by the hood slightly overlapping the surcoat; on his left arm is a large shield concave to the body, charged with the arms of Bures, and supported by an ornamental strap passing over the right shoulder and crossing the body diagonally; a large sword hangs from a richly ornamented bawdrick, which lies loosely on the hips; on the thigh appears the highly ornamented pourpoint, worn beneath the armour, and composed of embroidered silk or sarcenet; his feet rest on a lion, and over the insteps are buckled the single-pointed or "pryck" spur. This is perhaps the finest and most beautiful figure of the cross-legged period.

GORLESTON.

Sir de Bacon, c. 1320.

The next figure in point of date is a mutilated example, in so-called banded mail, of a member of the Bacon family, c. 1320, at Gorleston, also cross-legged, and illustrating the gradual addition of plate armour, the armpits, arms, and elbows being protected by steel plates covering the mail; the body armour is covered by the surcoat, which is in this case again confined round the waist by a band, and the sword with enriched scabbard is suspended from a bawdrick hanging loosely round the hips; the knee-pieces are probably of leather, whilst just enough of the legs remain to show that the shins were defended by steel plates; on his left arm is a small heater-shaped shield with the arms of the Bacon family thereon, and suspended by a narrow belt crossing the body diagonally; to his shoulders are attached the ailettes, or little wings, edged with fringe, and each charged with a plain cross, being the last example of the use on brass figures of these curious appendages.

Easton, and Yoxford. These are all in bascinets, plate gorgets, breast-plates, roundels at the armpits, fan-shaped elbow-pieces, skirts of taces, thigh, knee, and shin pieces, with long pointed sollerets and rowel spurs; all have swords, supported from belts crossing the taces diagonally, and most have daggers. The figure at Mendlesham (see illustration) is bearded, an unusual feature, and the one at Barsham wears the collar of SS.

BARSHAM.

A man in armour, c. 1415.

Between the dates of 1430 and 1460, there is no example, but between 1460 and 1470, when local peculiarities begin to appear, there are two curious specimens at Knoddishall and Great Thurlow, which show the cumbersome plate armour of the period, the defences for the shoulders and arms being greatly increased in size and number; the taces are now shorter, and have strapped to them large plates covering the thighs called "tuiles"; the knee-pieces, too, are increased, having plates above and below, while the sollerets are long and pointed.

The period of 1480—1490 is well illustrated by the three figures at Sotterley, Holbrook, and Fressingfield, which are almost similar in detail and workmanship. They are remarkable for the number of plates of

SOTTERLEY.

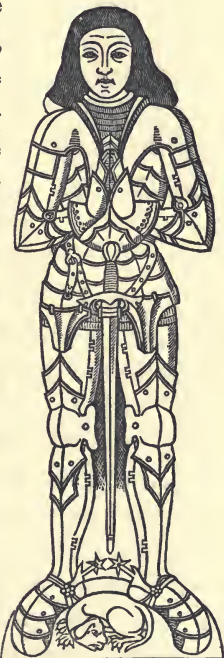

Thomas Playters, 1479.

Wenham, the date of the latter being 1514. In these figures the shoulder pieces are of smaller size, and have upright ridges. The mail skirt now re-appears, the tuiles decrease in size, whilst the sollerets, now termed sabatons, are very wide and rounded at the toes. To this period also belong the figures at Kenton and Denstone, both dated 1524, wearing tabards charged with the family arms.

About the year 1520 no fewer than seven examples of the local school occur, of which one at Belstead is dated 1518, and another at Little Thurlow is probably of the same which the shoulder defences consist, the strengthening of the breast-plate by the "demi-placcates," and the increased size of the elbow and knee-pieces. In the examples at Holbrook and Fressingfield, the feet rest on hounds, in the place of lions as before, whilst the Sotterley figure is represented as standing on a mound.

At Assington is a local figure, c. 1500, which forms a link between the last described and those produced during the next twenty years, of which there are examples at Nettlestead and Little period; these are followed by four figures, dated between the years 1525 and 1530, occurring at Acton, Little Bradley, Great Thurlow, and Little Waldingfield, all of which may have come from the same workshop. Another mutilated example of much the same date occurs at Euston.

After this, until the time when Elizabeth came to the throne, there is a gap in the series. However, during her reign there is no lack of examples, extending from 1557 until the early years of the reign of James I. During this time changes in the fashion of dress necessitated corresponding changes in the style of armour. The various pieces now differ much in shape and size, and are more or less richly ornamented. The taces and mail skirt disappear by degrees, whilst the tuiles increase in size, until they are finally superseded by the introduction of trunk hose, when the tassets alone appear fastened to the breastplate. This is well shown on the figure of Francis Clopton at Long Melford, 1577. Other examples showing the gradual development occur at Hawstead, Sir William Drury, 1557, whose armour is much ornamented with scroll work; at Brundish, 1559 and 1560 (see illustration), a pair of similar figures, representing members of the Colby family; at Braiseworth, Alexander Newton, 1569, a well-executed figure with head on helmet; at Barrow, Sir Clement Heigham, 1570, and at Depden, George Waldegrave and Sir Thomas Jermyn, 1572; the three latter kneeling figures. Other examples are at Sotterley, 1592, Easton, 1584, Ashbocking, 1585, Wrentham, 1593, Benhall, 1611, and Mildenhall, 1618.

Ecclesiastics.—These are poorly represented in the county, there being but eleven examples, of these four are in eucharistic vestments. The first is at Brundish, of Esmond de Burnedissh, c. 1360; followed by that at Lidgate, c. 1380, once in the head of a cross; Polstead, c. 1440; and Campsea Ash, Alexander Inglisshe, 1504, who holds a chalice on which is a wafer marked with a cross. At Bury St. Edmund's, St. Mary's, is a figure of Archdeacon Fynexs, 1514, in cassock, surplice, and almuce. Academical costume is represented at five places: Melton, c. 1430, where the ecclesiastic accompanies his parents; Pakefield, a half figure of Richard Folcard, 1451; Barningham, William Goche, 1499; Monewden, Thomas Reve, D.D. (see illustration), who appears in his doctor's robes; and a son kneeling with his parents, c. 1530, at Worlingworth. Of post-Reformation divines, besides that at Monewden, there are examples at Stonham Aspell, John Metcalfe, 1606; and Eyke, Henry Mason, 1619, both in preaching gowns. In this section may be included the chalices, at Rendham, 1523 (see illustration), and Gazeley, c. 1530.

Judicial.—There is one example only, and that is at Eyke, John Staverton, Baron of the Exchequer, c. 1430, in judicial robes ; nevertheless, mention must be made of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and Speaker of the Parliament, in the person of Sir Clement Heigham, at Barrow, 1570, who is represented in armour.

Legal.—Of strictly legal gentlemen there is but one, Robert Southwell, 1514, at Barham, who is styled “apprenticius ad leges,” and is represented in civil dress. In this class may also be included two notaries, both in the church of St. Mary Tower, Ipswich ; the earlier of the two being an unnamed figure, c. 1475, and the other that of Robert Wymbyll, 1506 ; both have inkhorn and pencease attached to their girdles.

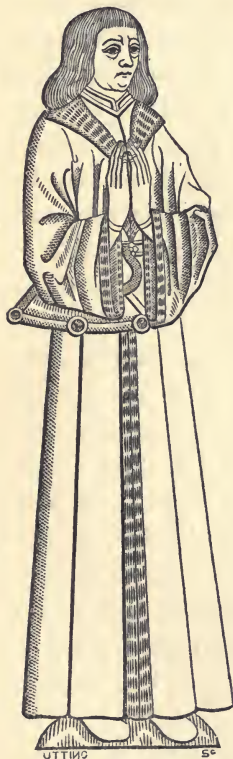

IPSWICH—
ST. MARY TOWER.
Robert Wymbyll,
Notary, 1506.

Civilians.—These are, for the most part, represented as accompanied by their wife, or wives. The earliest is a figure at Pakefield to John Bowf, c. 1417, who is represented with short hair, wearing a long tunic with close-fitting sleeves. Between 1420 and 1430, the tunic becomes shorter, the sleeves greatly increase in size at the elbow, remaining tight at the wrists, in shape resembling balloons, exemplified at Long Melford, c. 1420, by a member of the Clopton family, and by an unknown civilian at Melton, c. 1430. After the middle of the century, the sleeves of the tunic again become close-fitting, as at Walton, William Tabard, 1459, and elsewhere ; including the two kneeling figures at Ampton and Bury St. Edmund's, St. Mary's, both c. 1480, the one presumably a member of the Coket family, the other of the Smythe family, who wears the Yorkist collar with the lion of March as a pendant. Of this period there is one half-figure at Halesworth, John Everard, 1476.

Towards the close of the century, the local peculiarities, as in the case of the military figures, become strongly marked, and of these the most striking examples are the very curious figures at Euston, c. 1480 (see illustration), and Occold, William Corbald, c. 1490, where may be noticed the peculiar treatment of the hair, and the fur lining of the tunic and sleeves. The numerous figures at Orford do not appear to belong to the local type; all are in gowns trimmed and lined with fur, having wide sleeves. To these may be added the fine figure at Little Waldingfield of John Colman, 1506. During the next thirty years the local peculiarities are again apparent, as exemplified by instances at Worlingham, Nicholas Wrenne, 1511, a broken figure at Euston, c. 1520, and Wilby, c. 1530; then between 1540 and 1550, there are examples at Lakenheath, Lowestoft, Little Waldingfield, Pettaugh, and Stratford St. Mary (see illustration).

LITTLE WALDINGFIELD.
John Colman, 1506.

Figures of civilians of the Elizabethan period are numerous, the chief characteristic being a fur-lined gown, with long false sleeves, more or less ornamented. Good examples are at Orford, Petistree, various churches in Ipswich, Hadleigh, Denham near Eye, Aldeburgh, and Ixworth. There is a little half-figure at Fornham All Saints, of Thomas Barwick, M.D., 1599, holding in his right hand a staff or cane. About this time, or a little later, the gown gives place to the doublet, trunk hose, and short cloak, the common dress of the gentry of the period, and apparently of yeomen, as exemplified at Honington, George Duke, gentleman, 1594 (see illustration), whose doublet is richly ornamented, and who carries a sword; at Middleton, Anthony Pettow, yeoman, 1610, whose dress is similar in style, but much plainer, and without a sword; at Yoxford, Anthony Cooke, 1613; and at Mickfield, Peter Preston, 1616. John Eldred, the well-known traveller, buried at Great Saxham, 1632, is in similar costume, but in place of the cloak wears the gown. The figure of Robert Alfounder, gentleman, at East Bergholt, 1639, is the only example which shows the costume worn by gentlemen during the earlier years of the reign of Charles I.; he appears in a doublet and cloak with riding breeches in the place of the trunk hose, and with top boots, spurs, and large stirrup-guards.

Ladies.—Of single figures of ladies there are about forty representations; a greater number, more especially in the late period, accompany their husbands. The earliest is a small figure at Wrentham to Ele Bowet, 1400, in reticulated head-dress, wearing a long gown, buttoned down the front, gathered in at the neck, and having wide open sleeves; to this follows the large figure of a lady at Stoke by Nayland, c. 1400, which also appears in the reticulated head-dress, but with the addition of curls resting on the shoulders, sideless cote-hardie and mantle; followed very closely by the figure at Rougham of Margery Drury, 1405, and that at Burgate of Eleanor de Burgate, 1409. These are in costume very similar in style, but with the crespine head-dress and veil. Small figures of ladies without mantles, mostly with veil head-dresses, wearing gowns with sleeves gradually increasing in size, occur at Pakefield, c. 1417; Long Melford, c. 1420, probably of a young unmarried lady, with a cap; Melton and Eyke, both c. 1430; and a half-figure at Debenham, c. 1425.

The horned head-dress and close-fitting gown first appears at Yoxford, on the figure of Maud Norwich, 1428; a late example being at

LONG MELFORD.

Knoddishall, Head of lady, c. 1420.

Maud Jenney, 1460. The costume of a widow is well exemplified on the brass of Alice Bryan at Acton, 1435; at Great Thurlow, c. 1460 (see illustration), by two figures; at Wickham-Skeith, c. 1530, a kneeling figure; and at Darsham, by Anne Bedingfield, 1641.

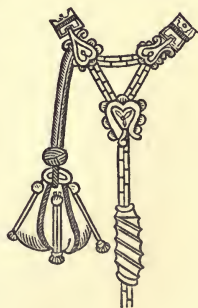

About the year 1480, the large butterfly head-dress comes into vogue, it is frequently accompanied by a dress with a low bodice, which varies in shape as much then as now; as at Sotterley, Anne Playters, 1479; Fressingfield, Elizabeth Brewes, 1489; and Euston, c. 1480 (see illustration). At Long Melford are the figures of two ladies of the Clopton family, whose gowns and mantles are elaborately ornamented with heraldic devices. To this succeeds the kennel-shaped or pedimental head-dress, which is exceedingly common in various forms between the years 1490 and 1530, generally accompanied by a close-fitting dress, more or less trimmed with fur, confined round the waist by a girdle with ornamented buckles and long ends, terminating in pomanders, &c., &c. Good examples are at Barham, Cecily Southwell, and at Little Wenham, Jane Brewes, both dated 1514. On the local figures, extending to about 1550, attached to the ornamental girdle is generally found a string of beads and a large pouch or bag, as at Assington, c. 1500, and at Little Waldingfield, Mary Appleton, 1526.

Girdle and pouch,

WALDINGFIELD.

Occasionally, as at Ellough (see illustration), the gown is open down the front, trimmed and edged with fur. Good heraldic mantles appear at Denstone, Margaret Everard, 1524; and Stoke by Nayland, Lady Katherine Howard, engraved c. 1535. The pedimental head-dress is now succeeded by the flat-topped Paris head, or Mary Queen of Scots cap, accompanied by an overgown, generally open in front to display the embroidered petticoat, with sleeves padded at the shoulders and slashed on the arms, sometimes having long appendages, or false sleeves, suspended from the shoulders, corresponding to those worn by civilians at the same period. Examples are at Hawstead, in the wives of Sir William Drury, 1557; at Sotterley, Thomasin Playters, 1578; and a very curious example of this form of costume at Stratford St. Mary, Elizabeth Crane, 1558 (see illustration).

Examples of the costume worn during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. may be seen at Easton, Radclyff Wingfield, 1601, showing the large ruff, the acutely pointed bodice, and the skirts extended by an enormous farthingale, the predecessor of the nineteenth century crinoline; this is also shown in the figure of Joan Brooke, at Yoxford, 1618. This fashion continued till it was overlapped and succeeded by high-peaked and broad-brimmed hats, of which examples appear at Aldeburgh, Mary Bence, 1606; Hadleigh, Elizabeth Glanfield, 1637; and many other places. The calash or hood, which not only covered the head and shoulders, but fell down behind the back nearly to the ground, is represented in the figure of Anne Butts, at Redgrave, 1609 (see illustration), and at Mendham, Cecily Freston, 1615. An extraordinary variation of this latter style occurs in the curious and local figure at Ellough of Margaret Chewt, 1607 (see illustration).

Children.—Of single figures there are six examples. At Brundish a youth is represented, c. 1570, in ordinary civil dress; at Woodbridge a small figure of John Shorlond, 1601, aged seven, is in a doublet and petticoat; at Walton William Simond, 1612, aged eleven, is a very much-worn plate of a small kneeling figure in a cloak; at Boxford David Birde, 1606, aged twenty-two weeks, is an infant in a cot (see illustration); and a “chrysom” occurs at Lavenham in Clopton D’Ewes, c. 1630, aged ten days. The last of the series is the shrouded figure at Stowmarket of Anne Tyrell, 1638, aged eight-and-a-half years.

Shrouded Figures and Skeletons.—In addition to the Lavenham and Stowmarket children, shrouded figures occur again at Lavenham, where Thomas Spryng, his wife and family, are all represented as rising from a tomb in their grave clothes: this is dated 1486; at Yoxford, 1485, where Thomasin Tendryng and five out of seven of her children are shrouded; and a little figure kneeling behind his father, Sir Clement Heigham, at Barrow, 1570. Two headless skeletons, c. 1500, are to be found on the floor of the south aisle at Lowestoft, and on the floor of the nave at Ufford is a quadrangular plate whereon is represented, as a skeleton, Richard Ballett, goldsmith, of London, 1598.

Canopies.—Triple canopies occur at Acton, 1435, and Melton (much damaged), c. 1430; double canopies at Burgate, 1409, Nayland, three examples, 1480 to 1500, Stoke by Nayland, c. 1425, and Wenham, 1514; single canopies at Campsea Ash, 1504, Long Melford, two examples, c. 1480, and Playford, c. 1400.

Bracket.—A single example remains at Ipswich, St. Mary Tower, c. 1520, said to be for Thomas Drayle, merchant.

Inscriptions.—These, unaccompanied by any sort of figure, usually of small size and local workmanship, are fairly numerous. Good examples of local work may be found at Thelnetham, North Cove, Grundisburgh, Withersfield, and Lowestoft. At Thrandeston, 1537, and at Boxstead, 1546, occur two inscriptions evidently from the same workshop, in that the lettering and ornamentation of the capitals is exactly alike. At Ampton is a small fillet bearing simply "Hic jacet Edmundus Coket," whilst one at Chelmondiston has the name only, "Thomas Bramstone."

Palimpsests.—Six of these have been noticed; at Ampton, Bury St. Edmund's, St. Mary, Cookley, Denham, Hadleigh, and Halesworth. Of these, three are portions of Flemish brasses.

Miscellaneous.—Of religious devices there is a mutilated crucifix at Kenton, 1524; a representation of the Holy Trinity at Orford, 1520; and a shield with a tau cross and scroll at Bury St. Edmund's, St. Mary, c. 1530. The Lancastrian collar of SS. occurs at Barsham, c. 1415, and the Yorkist of Suns and Roses at Bury St. Edmund's, St. Mary, c. 1480; the latter is possibly on the figure at Holbrook of the same date, Merchants' marks occur at Aldeburgh, 1610; Ampton. c. 1480; Ipswich, St. Mary Quay, 1525 and 1590;

St. Mary Tower, 1506 and c. 1520; St. Nicholas, 1604; Lavenham, 1486; Lowestoft, 1450; and Orford, c. 1510. The arms of the City of London are represented at Boxford, 1610, and Great Saxham, 1632; the town of Ipswich at Ipswich St. Clement's, 1583, St. Mary Quay, 1525, and St. Mary Tower, c. 1520; the Mercers' Company at Boxford, 1610, and Ipswich, St. Mary Tower, impaled with the Merchant's mark of Thomas Baldry, 1506; the Merchant Adventurers' at Boxford, 1610, and Ipswich, St. Mary Quay, 1525; the Stationers' at Little Bradley, 1584; the Saltfishmongers' at Lowestoft, c. 1450; the Clothworkers' at Great Saxham, 1632; the Goldsmiths' at Ufford, 1598; the East India Company at Boxford, 1610, and Great Saxham, 1632, where are also the shields of the Russia and Turkey merchants. The building of an aisle is recorded on the little inscription at Withersfield, c. 1480, and a bequest of milch kine for the use of the parish, at South Elmham, St. James, 1601. The brass of the civilian at Wilby, c. 1530, is accompanied by a small separate plate bearing thereon a running sheep. An unusual feature is portrayed at Hawstead, where the figures of Sir William Drury, 1557, and his first wife are represented with closed eyes, the second wife, who survived him, has the eyes open. The quadrangular plate, outside the church at Ringsfield, to the memory of Nicholas Garneys, the builder of Redesham Hall, who having died in 1599, is represented with his wife in heraldic dresses, is copied from one at Kenton of an earlier date to John Garneys and wife, 1524, an heraldic achievement taking the place of the crucifix. Some of the brasses at Long Melford were probably laid down about 1480, to the memory of his ancestors, by Francis Clopton, the great benefactor to the church in that place. At Sotterley two of the Playters' brasses appear to have been renewed about the year 1630; a new head was added to the mutilated figure of the little priest at Lidgate in 1901; the fragments of the Browne brass at Halesworth were recovered from the depths of the river Waveney, in 1825; and an American gentleman, a descendant of the Winthrops, has, in recent years, restored to the church of Groton, the interesting inscription to Adam Winthrop, lord of the manor and patron of the church in 1562.

II. Inscrip. of twenty-two English verses (mutilated), and above a small plate with four English verses. John Crosyer, "late parson of this towne," benefactor to the poor [1569]. Chancel, H. Mural. Size, 19 by 14; 12 by $3\frac{1}{2}$.

BARSHAM.

I. Eff. of a man in complete plate armour with a lion at his feet, and collar of SS.; also initials R.S. on the hilt of the sword—marginal inscrip. with evangelistic emblems lost, c. 1415.—Suckling's Suffolk, i., p. 42; Planche's Cyclopædia of Costume, i., p. 18; Haines' Introd., p. 186. Chancel, H. Size, 49 by 13.

N.B.—This brass is, in Haines, assigned to Sir Robert Suckling, possibly on account of the initials on the hilt of the sword, but the Suckling family held no property in Barsham in the fifteenth century. It is ascribed to Sir Robert atte Tighe in Suckling's Memorials of Suffolk.

BATTISFORD.

I. Inscrip. Mary Everton, wife of George Everton, "late of this pish," Gent., 1608, æt. 103. "This monument was layde at the charges of Peter Preston." Chancel. Size, 17 by 6.
